ROSE MAYNARD BARTON, R.W.S. (1856-1929), the daughter of an Irish solicitor, divided her time between Dublin and London and painted many scenes of city parks, monuments and streets. She worked in water-colour in a fluid style that may owe something to the work of an Irish contemporary, Mildred Anne Butler, known especially for her garden studies. Rose Barton exhibited at the London galleries from 1889 onwards and was elected a member of the Royal Society of Painters in Watercolour in 1911.

Dear Mom & Dad,

Thanks for your recent letters. I've been enjoying my days off while preparing for the move on March 1st. Tomorrow we're planning to visit the Winterthur mansion near Wilmington.

Love,

Ann &
Vickie
